Diplomatic Correspondence, etc. The New York Times, November 24, 1914. First. The most vital modifications of the Declaration of London are contained in the rule concerning conditional contraband under Nos. 3 and 5 of the above-mentioned Order in Council. Article 33 of the Declaration of London defines that there can be no question of conditional contraband except in the case where cargo is destined for the use of the administrative departments or the military forces of the hostile power. Moreover, according to Article 35 the question whether goods are conditional contraband or not can under no circumstances arise when the vessel is sailing for a neutral port. The above provisions which are, in the main, in accordance with the accepted rules of international law and represent the outcome of the just weighing of the interests of the belligerents on the one side and of the neutral countries on the other side, are as good as annulled by the said Order in Council, for, according to its No. 3 the hostile destination of the cargo is to be presumed in every case where the consignee of the cargo is under the control of the authorities of the hostile State. This, however, means nothing else but that each and every cargo shipped to the hostile country is liable to be seized because all inhabitants of that country are under the control of the authorities. This rule is supplemented by No. 5 of the said Order,...
