English poetry, and had them learn selected passages by heart, as a regular school exercise. It was, doubtless, to her influence that Lucretia Mott owed her familiarity with Cowper and Young. In her old age she would repeat page after page of the Task, as the family sat together on the porch at Roadside, in the dusky summer evenings. The course of studies was hardly what could be called wide in its scope, but it was all that the Quakerism of that day demanded, and the instruction was thorough as far as it went. As in other schools of the time, this included the use of the globes, but no map of any kind was used until Captain Coffin, in 1708, presented one of the United States. This was the first map Lucretia ever saw. The teachers were paid small salaries, only about...
