Here Professor Silliman found Dr. James Woodhouse filling the chemical chair in the University of Pennsylvania, on whose lectures he was a faithful attendant. But he was not long in discovering that he made more real progress in the study of chemistry by availing himself of the advantages of a small laboratory, which he and a young man by the name of Robert Hare united in fitting up with a little apparatus and limited means of research. There these zealous young students worked together, elaborating the compound blowpipe, previously contrived by Hare, and of which the history has already been given. His chemical work upon the Weston Meteorite has also been noticed. His Elements of Chemistry in the order of the Lectures given in Yale College was published in two volumes in 1830, and embraced the fruits of a long course of successful experience in demonstrative...
