Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: .attention to plants desirable to introduce into Hawaii for bee pasturage. White sage, black sage, two species of Phacelia and horehound, abundant nectar producers and suitable for dry waste lands, will be introduced during the coming year. A list of some twenty other plants was obtained and other introductions will be made. Some of the plants are valuable as forage, but others must be studied to learn whether or not there will be danger of their invading the pasture lands or cultivated areas. As regards wax production, wax is at present considered simply incidental to honey production. The writer believes it will be more profitable to Hawaiian bee keepers to increase the proportion of wax to honey and experiments will be undertaken with this in view. The experiments will include the feeding back of honey and modifications of the present methods of extraction and the use...
