Thankfully, Jill can rely on the always-present love, support, and humor of her lifelong friends, who are all discovering that the change can be quite disruptive in many ways. Barb is desperate to put the spice back in her marriage and will go to surgical extremes to make it happen; Patty just wants to get married and start her fantasy life; and Kate, the group comedienne, is sending her only child off to college while still managing to unwittingly entertain her three best friends. Jill has her own unique set of challenges to face as life after fifty commences. Empty Nest Syndrome strikes with a vengeance, so Jill reenters the workforce for the first time in two decades. She decides to become a chauffeur for senior citizens, but soon madcap events combined with senior moments test Jill s patience with her new career choice. Not to mention her crazy relatives, who show up on her doorstep at will. The only way Jill will make it through her fiftieth year with any shred of her sanity intact will be by leaning on her best friends. Together, they might find a way to deal with life after thirty-nine.
